The idea behind an ERM roundtable summit is just to bring people together, business professionals engaged in Enterprise Risk Management, really working and trying to share best practices.

David Fox, Assurance Director, Performance GRC, PWC

I've been involved in NC State ERM roundtable since 2004. I love the interactions, this is a wonderful learning environment; you see a variety of industries, you can always borrow methods, and practices, and ideas.

Henry Yaniz, President of Food & Beverage Enterprise Risk Management Association

NCSU, and the ERM initiative here, has been the leaders in linking performance, strategy, and enterprise risk management. They have been the most effective at it.

Colleen Larson, Risk Manager, Emergent BioSolutions

In my opinion, these roundtables are the leading forum for Enterprise Risk Management.

David Hughes, Assistant VP, ERM & Business Continuity Planning Office, Hospital Corporation of America, Inc.

Ten years ago, you pretty much saw financial services companies doing ERM, and now, especially now public companies are doing ERM, a lot of others are not public companies, so it has become more widely accepted and used.

Nicole West, Senior Director Internal Audit, Community Health Systems

The experience here has been fantastic. I come here and I am able to take something away, every time. It's practical, it's not theory; it's application.

Brahm Moolman, Master of Accounting Student, NC State University Poole College of Management

What impresses me most about the ERM roundtable was that there are companies from different industries, different sizes, all over the country. But they are very honest in sharing what worked for them, and how they implemented ERM program, and the challenges they faced.

Jeremiah Thayer, Master of Accounting Student, NC State University Poole College of Management

I definitely recommend students to try to attend these tables if they are able to. The main reason is that the roundtables have really helped me see how the things that I learn in class are getting applied to real life. So coming in to see real businesses talk about how they have adapted this framework to try to create value for their company has really been invaluable, and it opens my mind a little bit beyond the classroom to see what's coming in the future.

Bruce Branson, Professor, Associate Director, ERM Initiative, NC State University Poole College of Management

What we are trying to accomplish with the initiative is that we can be a thought leader on this topic, we really hope we can continue to share knowledge, we learn something every time we participate in these conferences, I think everyone leaves with new ideas, that's really the primary goal.
